CROSS-COUNTRY JOHNNY CAKES

In June 1934 Jackson and his eldest brother, Charles, set out on a road trip from New York across the vast American terrain in a Model T Ford. The destination was the home of their mother, Stella, in California, and they also wanted to finally pay their respects at the grave of their father, who had died more than a year before. Encouraged by their teacher Thomas Hart Benton's belief in the importance of American road trips for artists, they packed their sketchbooks, two harmonicas (Benton had encouraged Charles and Jackson to learn), and other supplies and set off on a cross-country adventure. Their drawings depicted the sometimes desperate scenes of daily life during the Depression. All around them they saw its effects and yet "everywhere they have been friendly. The kids, even in the most poverty stricken sections, are especially likeable" (West Virginia, June 16, 1934). At the end of each day they searched out camping areas close to water to wash clothes and bathe away the summer's heat. They slept under shelters at local schools, on the properties of local farmers, occasionally drawing a portrait in exchange for food and a dry place to sleep, and they lived on the simplest of meals.

Johnny Cake became their meal of choice. Charles wrote to his first wife, Elizabeth, "in Tennessee I bought a large bag of corn meal and we prepare Johnny Cake for our meals. So far we haven't tired of it!" (July 9, 1934). They alternated the Johnny Cake with whatever food was readily available and inexpensive, such as tortillas in Texas, watermelon in Arizona, and, of course, their mother's magnificent meals once they arrived in California.

Makes 15 small
2" johnny cakes
1 cup finely ground cornmeal
1 tsp sugar
½ tsp salt
1 cup boiling water
½ cup milk, more or less,
as desired for consistency butter or corn oil, for frying butter and/or maple syrup, for serving

- In a medium bowl, combine cornmeal, sugar, and salt. Slowly add boiling water, stirring, to make a paste. Stir in milk until mixture resembles mashed potatoes, adding more if a thinner consistency is preferred.
- In a fry pan, heat butter or corn oil, then drop spoonfuls of batter to make 2-inch cakes. Cook 3-5 minutes each side or until a brown, crunchy crust forms, while the inside remains soft.
- Serve hot with butter and/or maple syrup.
